Best of Tennessee Headlines The Nashville Predators are on their way to a phenomenal season, with four 50-plus point seasons in five years and a playoff run to the conference finals in the 2018 Stanley Cup Playoffs. The Preds were also granted a second-round bye. The greatest player in the history of Titan hockey was inducted into the NFA Wall of Honor, which is sponsored by the Nashville Predators. John Vanbiesbrouck, a four-time All-Star, and the all-time leading point getter in NHL history, was inducted as part of the inaugural class. The Nashville Predators hit the All-Star break on a high note, with a three-game winning streak. But it's been a slow start for Pekka Rinne, as his average save percentage is well below .910, lowest among players with at least 15 appearances. The Nashville Predators face a tough test with the Minnesota Wild, who were the first team to knock off the Preds in the 2018 playoffs. Nashville is going up against a Wild team that is expected to once again be one of the top teams in the NHL. The Preds made roster moves, adding a slew of talent in addition to the glut of talent already on the roster. The largest acquisition was the return of Ryan Johansen from injury, adding more depth and skill to a team that has struggled to score this season. After the Predators came out victorious last season, winning four straight games by a combined margin of 23-3 in the final weeks, the team went through some growing pains in the first two months of the 2018-19 campaign, losing four games in a row to the Dallas Stars and the Carolina Hurricanes. so realistic I sometimes can't believe it's a drawing! The movement on stage is a little

: Q&A about carnival culture in Wellington So many ideas and outcomes have come out of this year's Face the Screamer! Mask of Fury. The festival has been a creative and social bonanza. Producer Matt Roberts caught up with Dean Moriarty, creator of the event, and asked him some questions about it. Pretty well, as it turns out. It's become a key event that does a fantastic job of showcasing the best of what Wellington has to offer. It's carefully curated and truly reflects the mood, atmosphere and energy of our city. Although, the festival team might kick themselves for not seeing the potential for it to grow into this in previous years. Matt Roberts Mistaken for a photographer to begin with, Dean Moriarty set up the first Mask Of Fury in 2011 with the intention to return every year in a more socially focused event. Its success allowed the organisers to plan a more complex festival, developing collaborations and partnerships with local businesses. Long-time theatre producer Matt Roberts and entertainment director Kate Parsons joined the team as full time producers in 2014, moving it even further towards its vision. "Since the inception of Mask Of Fury, we've rapidly grown year on year. It has shaped this group of friends to become an increasingly tight-knit crew with a shared vision for what the festival has set out to achieve. The team's passion and entrepreneurial spirit is fantastic and this combined with widespread support from New Zealand's arts and business communities, makes adding more stages to Mask Of Fury a real possibility in the next few years." There's a lot happening on both sides of the Penn- or should that be Ohi-Ocean. From the upcoming fringe Flippers club, to fringe events and performances from the established, cult directors of nearby One Act Play... For the people What have been the highlights of this year's festival? "Fingers crossed it's the fringe performances and the Fringe Club! [Big cheers from the audience] There's definitely been highlights. These have all been happening everyday. Everyone's been doing amazing things; there's never been a dull moment. “To have these great independant festivals happening in the same city is something special. With last year’s diversity of the international festival and Tonga’s fantastic display of culture it’s about recogn
