Game console? I am wondering if there are the best practices to obtain the timestamp of the system that a game console is running on? E.g.: the console registers on the PC the amount of time that has passed since starting the game. The PC would calculate the amount of time that has passed since the game was started. The console and the PC would exchange this information so both systems could advance simultaneously. My question is: is there an established system for doing this that I am not aware of? Is there maybe a way to set up an event that the system registers when it detects a new game is being played? So the 6d1f23a050
