That New Version is.Q: Why is a "non-default constructor" required in member function definition of an abstract class? Assuming the abstract class has a default constructor: `class DataBase{ public: // DataBase(){} // };` Now I need to create a pure virtual function in the class, and I can't understand why it requires me to declare a (non-default) constructor: `class DataBase{ public: virtual DataBase* CreateInstance(){ return new DataBase(); } // };` I understand in principle that a constructor is needed for initialising the object; but why is a constructor required for a member function of an abstract class? The call to new goes from the abstract class to the derived class, so the abstract class can only construct a temporary object (and not a DataBase*): `DataBase* pObject = new DataBase();` What if you instead define your function like this: `virtual DataBase* CreateInstance(){ return 0; }` A: The required statement is here for three reasons: the implicit constructor is only used at the "top level" of the class declaration (which is the first thing compiled, before any member functions come into play). it is assumed that (non-delegating) constructors are empty, defaulted, and private the function which uses it is virtual, and it needs to be valid as any object, thus making it virtual void CreateInstance(); and finally the implementation is abstract as default, and does not have a pure virtual destructor. `abstract class DataBase: virtual ~DataBase(){}` Thus the compiler has to be assured that no valid objects are destructed, which means there is a constructor in the parent

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a scanning image-forming apparatus for providing an image in an electrophotographic process as represented by a laser printer and the like, which forms a latent image on a photoreceptor for each scan, develops the latent image into a toner image and transfers the toner image to a transfer material to form an image. 2. Description of the Related Art A well-known conventional image-forming apparatus of the type described above has been proposed which is provided with a photoreceptor, a transfer sheet conveyor belt and a switching mechanism. The switching mechanism is provided with a sheet-transfer path for transferring the transfer sheet from the photoreceptor to the conveyor belt, a sheet-in path for feeding the transfer sheet to the conveyor belt, a sheet-out path for discharging the transfer sheet from the conveyor belt and a conveying roller pair. The conveyor belt is provided on the sheet-out path. In the above image-forming apparatus, when a new transfer sheet is loaded onto the sheet-in path, the transfer sheet is first passed through the switching mechanism and then forwarded to the conveyor belt, and the transfer sheet is thereafter conveyed to the photoreceptor. The time required for conveyance of the new transfer sheet to the photoreceptor depends upon the peripheral speed of the conveyor belt or the system configuration. If the sheet-in speed (the speed of the conveyor belt) is set to the maximum, the transfer sheet fed from the sheet-in path cannot 6d1f23a050
